New Industrial Product Line Offers Customers Durable, Cost-Effective, Corrosion-Resistant Solutions

Axalta recently launched its Strenex industrial product line for general industrial, construction, and fabrication. Strenex expands the company's industrial portfolio and enables entry into the light and medium industrial markets throughout North America.

"Axalta is committed to continuous innovation and developing products that meet the high standards that customers expect from us," says Dave Heflin, Vice President, Global Industrial Liquid Coatings. "Strenex balances the demands of corrosion-resistance, aesthetic appeal and environmental constraints to meet the most challenging production environments and application conditions. These new products also are designed to deliver fast drying times and ease-of-application, which provides the opportunity for our customers to become more productive and efficient. We are excited about the value these products will bring to customers and the opportunity to enter this growing market."

The Strenex family of products includes waterborne and solventborne single-component alkyd and acrylic products, as well as solventborne urethanes. The offering has a selection of fit-for-purpose fast-drying primers and direct-to-metal (DTM) topcoats that allows users to reduce production times and costs. The 120- and 220-series primers offer steel fabricators and painters' options that meet industry standards for performance at multiple Volatile Organic Compound (VOC) levels, including zero-VOC. The 602-series

DTM urethane product line provides high-film build properties with sag resistance up to 12 mils in a single coat.

Graco Introduces New Product Line Using Electrostatics to Spray Waterborne Material

Graco Inc. recently launched its HydroShield Waterborne System. It says the new finishing system gives manufacturers more reason to switch from conventional to electrostatic technology to spray waterborne material.

The HydroShield batch system, the first installment of a developing product line, gives operators the control to use Pro Xp WB air spray and air-assist electrostatic spray guns to spray waterborne material. The batch isolation system benefits industrial finishing operations by allowing refill without system shutdown so when the painter releases the spray gun trigger, the internal isolation pump refills itself from a supply source, improving productivity.

Other features, such as an automatic refill, reduces the need to open the isolation cabinet, resulting in greater safety, Graco says. The controller interface allows users to select spray functions, stay informed of system status and set a maintenance schedule.

Graco says using electrostatics to spray waterborne material means more paint lands on each part, compared to conventional spraying.

"We designed the HydroShield system with the operator in mind," says Wendy Hartley, Graco Product Marketing Manager for the Industrial Products Division. "The controller keeps the operator informed of the system status and provides process control, which makes spraying high-quality parts easy."

SAMES KREMLIN Launches New FPro Gun Range

The company says the FPro S (Suction) guns combine the some features of the FPro P, such as a lightweight gun body, enhanced suction capacity valves, the Vortex, as well as some new features.

According to SAMES KREMLIN, the main advantages of the new guns include new the company's spraying technology – The Vortex – the same patented technology embedded in the FPro P; enhanced suction power; and new suction cups (reusable and 3M adaptor for disposable cups).

SAMES KREMLIN recommends using the FPro S with its new light and flexible air hoses for easy handling.
